Sisley was deeply influenced by the work of Claude Monet, Camille Pissarro, and Pierre-Auguste Renoir. He adopted their plein air painting technique, which involved painting outdoors to capture the fleeting effects of light and atmosphere. Sisley's paintings are characterized by their soft, hazy brushstrokes, vibrant colors, and atmospheric perspective.

Sisley's favorite subject matter was the landscape. He loved to paint the serene countryside around Paris, especially the banks of the Seine River and the rolling hills of Louveciennes. His paintings depict the changing seasons, the shimmering light of dawn and dusk, and the beauty of the natural world.

The Impressionist Movement

Impressionism was a revolutionary art movement that emerged in France in the late 19th century. Impressionist painters sought to capture the fleeting moments of everyday life, with a focus on the effects of light and atmosphere. They rejected the traditional academic style, which emphasized detail and precision, and instead embraced a more spontaneous and expressive approach.

Sisley played a pivotal role in the development of Impressionism. His paintings were exhibited at the first Impressionist exhibition in 1874, and he continued to show his work at subsequent exhibitions throughout his career. Sisley's art helped to define the Impressionist aesthetic and solidify the movement's place in the history of Western art.
