Founding Mothers: The Women Who Raised Our Nation is a fascinating and inspiring account of the lives of some of the most influential women in American history.

These women played a vital role in shaping the nation's founding principles and ideals, and their stories are essential reading for anyone who wants to understand the true history of the United States.

Author Cokie Roberts tells the stories of eight women who made significant contributions to the founding of the United States: Abigail Adams, Martha Washington, Mercy Otis Warren, Hannah Adams, Sarah Franklin Bache, Anne Bailey, Elizabeth Willing Powel, and Judith Sargent Murray.

These women were all strong, intelligent, and independent-minded. They came from different backgrounds and had different experiences, but they shared a common goal: to help create a better future for their country.

Roberts' book brings these women to life, and gives readers a new appreciation for their contributions to American history.

Abigail Adams

Abigail Adams was the wife of John Adams, the second president of the United States. She was a brilliant writer and political thinker, and she played a major role in her husband's career.

Adams was a strong advocate for women's rights. She believed that women should be educated and have the same opportunities as men.

In a letter to her husband, Adams wrote, "Remember the ladies, and be more generous and favourable to them than your ancestors. Do not put such unlimited power into the hands of the husbands. Remember, all men would be tyrants if they could."

Adams' words resonated with other women, and she helped to inspire the women's rights movement in the United States.

Martha Washington

Martha Washington was the wife of George Washington, the first president of the United States. She was a gracious and dignified hostess, and she helped to create a sense of unity and purpose in the new nation.

Washington was also a strong supporter of her husband's career. She traveled with him on his military campaigns, and she provided him with emotional support and encouragement.

Washington was a role model for other women, and she helped to set a standard for the role of the first lady.

Mercy Otis Warren

Mercy Otis Warren was a playwright, poet, and historian. She was a strong advocate for American independence, and she wrote several plays and poems that helped to rally support for the cause.

Warren was also a close friend of John and Abigail Adams. She corresponded with them frequently, and she shared her thoughts on politics, literature, and the future of the United States.

Warren's writings provide a valuable glimpse into the minds of the Founding Fathers and Mothers, and she is considered one of the most important female intellectuals of the American Revolution.

Hannah Adams

Hannah Adams was the first American woman to work as a professional writer. She wrote several books on history and religion, and she was a respected authority on both subjects.

Adams' work helped to educate Americans about their own history and culture. She also helped to pave the way for other women who wanted to pursue careers in writing.

Adams was a pioneer in the field of women's education, and she is considered one of the most important female writers of the early American republic.

Sarah Franklin Bache

Sarah Franklin Bache was the daughter of Benjamin Franklin. She was a talented artist and musician, and she was also a strong advocate for education and social reform.

Bache founded the first circulating library in the United States, and she also helped to establish the Philadelphia Orphan Asylum.

Bache was a lifelong friend of George and Martha Washington, and she played a major role in the social and cultural life of the new nation.

Anne Bailey

Anne Bailey was the wife of Francis Bailey, a delegate to the Continental Congress. She was a strong supporter of American independence, and she helped to organize the first women's political group in the United States.

Bailey's group, the Daughters of Liberty, worked to raise money for the war effort and to support the troops.

Bailey was a courageous and determined woman, and she played a vital role in the American Revolution.

Elizabeth Willing Powel

Elizabeth Willing Powel was the wife of Samuel Powel, the first mayor of Philadelphia. She was a prominent socialite and a patron of the arts.

Powel's home was a gathering place for the intellectual and political elite of the new nation. She hosted many important events, and she helped to create a sense of community in the young city of Philadelphia.

Powel was a gracious and charming hostess, and she was considered one of the most influential women in the United States.

Judith Sargent Murray

Judith Sargent Murray was a writer and playwright. She was a strong advocate for women's rights, and she wrote several essays and plays that challenged traditional gender roles.

Murray was also a close friend of Mercy Otis Warren. The two women corresponded frequently, and they shared their thoughts on politics, literature, and the future of the United States.

Murray's writings helped to shape the women's rights movement in the United States, and she is considered one of the most important female intellectuals of the early American republic.

The women who raised our nation were a diverse and remarkable group. They came from different backgrounds and had different experiences, but they shared a common goal: to help create a better future for their country.

These women were strong, intelligent, and independent-minded. They made significant contributions to the founding of the United States, and their stories are essential reading for anyone who wants to understand the true history of our nation.

Cokie Roberts' book, Founding Mothers: The Women Who Raised Our Nation, is a fascinating and inspiring account of the lives of these remarkable women.
