

Hope and Redemption in Baseball's Longest Game

On August 1, 1920, the Brooklyn Robins and Boston Braves played the longest game in baseball history. The game lasted 26 innings, and it was filled with drama, suspense, and hope. In the end, the Braves won the game on a walk-off home run by Joe Connolly.

The game was played at Braves Field in Boston. The Robins were the home team, but the Braves had the home field advantage because they were in first place in the National League. The game started at 3:00 p.m., and it ended at 11:50 p.m. The game was so long that it had to be suspended twice, once for darkness and once for rain.
