In the winter of 1925, a deadly diphtheria outbreak struck the remote town of Nome, Alaska. With no way to reach the nearest hospital, the town's only hope was a team of sled dogs led by a Siberian husky named Balto.

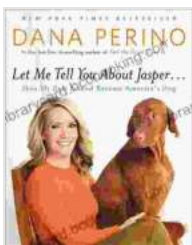

Balto and his team of dogs faced treacherous conditions on their 658-mile journey to Nome. They braved freezing temperatures, blinding snowstorms, and icy trails. But Balto never gave up, and he led his team to Nome with the life-saving antitoxin.

Balto's heroic journey captured the hearts of Americans and made him a national celebrity. He was featured in newspapers and magazines, and he even met President Calvin Coolidge at the White House.

Balto's story is a heartwarming tale of courage, determination, and friendship. It is a story that will inspire readers of all ages.
