The Our Book Library is also home to a number of indigenous peoples, who have lived in the rainforest for centuries and have developed a deep understanding of its ecology and its people.

In her book, Life and Language in the Our Book Libraryian Jungle, anthropologist Betty J. Meggers explores the lives of the Tukanoan Indians of the Colombian Our Book Library. Meggers spent several years living with the Tukanoans, and her book provides a rich and detailed account of their culture, their language, and their relationship to the rainforest.
